Dear Grant,

Again you have done what I tried to tell you how to prevent when last you did the same thing. You have asked and arranged the impossible. The result is to impede what you want and to discriminate against those most active in seeking it.

I cannot be in New York 2/5 because I will then be in California. It will be physically impossible for you to get copies of Photographic Whitewash from me in time for a 1/22 meeting because you did not let me know in time and even now do not say what you want. In an effort to accomplish this, however, I will send you 10 copies today. If they do not reach you in time, try the Diamondstein Book Co, which is in the NY phone book. Their main office is in New Rochelle. I think Bo Kazine has no stock. However, I will not have time to take these to the Post Office for I am already late in leaving for Washington. I have just come home from some midwest appearances and a very tiring, improvised train trip, the planes being grounded by the storm. So, I cannot insure the package.

I do wish you could realize how frustrating this is to me, for whatever you try and arrange always works out against my personal interest simply because you assume I do nothing but await your beck. Is there any reason why you cannot ask me in advance, before you set a date? Everyone else always does. It costs but a few days and a few pennies to write and less than a dollar to phone at night.

The net effect is to increase the competitive handicap that impedes what I am trying to do and to enjoy more no and. I would much rather be deliberate left out than included in a design that accomplishes it.

At some point, I hope you will realize that this also handicaps what you are hoping to accomplish. I do want to help. Try and make it possible.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
